(c) Support to encourage diversification away from growing illicit narcotic crops			0.00

Note:

¹¹ Agricultural Input Subsidies: Provides subsidies to Agricultural Input Companies (AIC) in order to limit price increases for agricultural inputs (fertilizers, pesticides, and diesel oil) to less than the rate of inflation. There is no relationship between eligibility for low-priced inputs and producer sales of grains or other commodities to the State Grain Agencies.

Notes:

- ¹² The State contract purchase price. This is a low, contract-specified price paid by state agricultural purchase agencies (Grain Bureau, Cotton and Jute Company, etc.) for a stipulated amount of a farmers production of grain or cotton. The amount and price are specified in a contract before sowing. The price is calculated on the basis of a weighted average of the "quota" and "above quota" prices set by the central government.
- ¹³ The total quantity of agricultural product procured by the State at the State contract purchase price.
- ¹⁴ The State negotiated price. This is a price paid by the State for grain it purchases in addition to the quantity specified in the contracts identified in note 14. The negotiated purchase price generally falls between the low, contract purchase price and the market price.
- ¹⁵ The total quantity of grains procured by the State at the negotiation purchase price.
- ¹⁶ The external reference price for net imported goods (c.i.f.) such as wheat (1993, 1994, 1995), rice and maize (1995), others (1993 to 1995) is equal to the import value of a commodity divided by its quantity imported. The external reference price for net exported goods (f.o.b.) such as rice (1993, 1994), maize (1993, 1994), soybean (1993, 1994, 1995) is equal to the export value of a commodity divided by its quantity exported. The data calculated in this table were provided by China's General Administration of Customs. The exchange rates are 1993: 5.7619 yuan per US dollar; 1994: 8.6187; and 1995: 8.3507.
