1. In connexion with the consultation under the provisions of paragraph 12(b) of Article XVIII to be held in June 1971, the Government of Brazil has transmitted (a) a note on measures taken in trade liberalization, and (b) a statement on the balance-of-payments position of Brazil. These are reproduced on the following pages.1

2. It will be noted that the outline of measures taken refers to no action in the past two years. On the assumption that the situation remains essentially as it was at the time of the last consultation, members of the Committee may wish to refer to the documents pertaining to that consultation, notably BOP/92 and BOP/92/Rev.1. Other relevant information may be found in the background material supplied by the International Monetary Fund, a copy of which has to be forwarded to each member of the Committee.

(A) MEASURES TAKEN IN THE FIELD OF TRADE LIBERALIZATION

In the context of the trade and financial policies followed since 1964, measures were taken to assure increasing trade liberalization. The main restrictions on imports for balance-of-payments reasons, as foreseen in Article 48 of Law No. 3.244, in force since 14 August 1957, were suspended (Central Bank Resolution No. 41, dated 22 November 1966). Accordingly, as of 1 March 1967, imports of goods classified in the "Special Category" follow the same procedures which apply to imports under the "General Category". The exchange cover certificate, formerly required for the imports under the "General Category" was abolished and replaced by an "Import Voucher" (Guia de Importação) containing for consular and customs purposes the relevant specifications of the goods to be imported. This "Import Voucher", issued by the Bank of Brazil, is valid for shipment of the imported goods, within a period of 120 days. The importer, if he so wishes, may close the exchange coverage contract with any one of the authorized banks, prior to the actual issue of the "Import Voucher" (Resolution No. 35, dated 18 September 1966, of the Central Bank).

1 Certain statistical material accompanying the statement on the balance-of-payments position will be circulated separately.
(B) BALANCE OF PAYMENTS, 1969/1970

During the past three years, Brazil's balance of payments maintained a steady trend: foreign transactions showed surpluses of US$32 million, US$549 million and US$54.5 million, respectively. These figures reflect a substantially favourable performance of capital movements. Net inflow of investment capital and loans exceeded the structurally negative current account balance - current transactions deficits were US$508 million in 1968, US$281 million in 1969 and US$622 million in 1970 - and made possible the achievement of such results.

A. Foreign trade

Expressed in dollars f.o.b., Brazil's overall foreign trade (exports plus imports), which averaged US$3 billion in 1964/68, increased to US$4.3 billion in 1969 and US$5.3 billion in 1970.

Total value of trade rose by 16 per cent in 1969 and 23 per cent in 1970, which represents growth rates above the levels reached by gross national product indicators and clearly demonstrates the efficiency of the well co-ordinated and realistic exchange and foreign trade policies.

Exports

Brazilian exports showed strong and continuing progress over the last two years.

In 1969 exports totalled US$2,311 million, which was 23 per cent above the 1968 level (US$1,881 million) and the US$2,739 million reached in 1970 represent a 17.1 per cent rise over the preceding year. Compared with the 1964/1968 period when exports averaged US$1.7 billion, this meant a 58.8 per cent increase.

However, total exports for the last three years did not represent absolute cumulative gains for the Brazilian economy, but only a partial recovery toward a position which would long since have been achieved if the price levels registered for major export products in the early 1950's had been maintained.

As for the composition of traditional export commodities, primary products such as coffee, cocoa, cotton, mineral ores and timber, still represent the bulk of Brazilian exports, owing to the structure of the economy. The country has been trying to diversify the composition of its exports by including new products or by conquering new markets for traditional commodities, in order to face the undeniable reality that world trade for most primary commodities has presented only modest increases linked to world population growth. The trend of Brazilian exports in the last three years shows the correctness of the new policy: major export products presented considerable growth and new commodity exports, especially manufactures, either grew or maintained their position. It is important to note that exports of manufactures, which totalled US$175 million in 1964, rose to US$404.5 million in 1968, to US$499.8 million in 1969 and to US$643.7 million in 1970. This last figure represents a 300 per cent rise above the 1964 level.
Imports

Since the Brazilian economy is highly dependent on imports of raw materials and capital goods, import level is closely related to economic performance.

Gross national product rose by 8.4 per cent, 9 per cent and 9.5 per cent in 1968, 1969 and 1970, respectively, and Brazilian imports experienced increases of 28 per cent, 7.5 per cent and 27 per cent during the same years. Compared with the 1964/68 average, the value of imports for 1970 represents a 94.3 per cent rise. These increases can be accounted for not solely by items closely related to the development process, but also by consumer goods, which is a good indication of the liberal exchange and trade measures adopted by the authorities.

B. Exchange system

The flexible exchange rate system adopted since August 1968, together with the elimination of speculative pressures which arose as fixed rates became unrealistic, assured adequate remuneration to exporters and gave a great stimulus to export activities.

Since the establishment of the new exchange system in August 1968 (up to 31 December 1970) the exchange rate has undergone twenty readjustments. According to end of year rates, re-adjustments reached 13.6 per cent in 1969 and 13.8 per cent in 1970.

The positive impact registered in major balance-of-payments items clearly indicates the advantages of maintaining a more realistic exchange rate, not only in the promotion of exports, but also as a powerful tool in the regulation of import expenditures and in the maintenance of an adequate flow of foreign capital.

C. Capital movements

The acceleration of the country's economic development, the curtailment of inflation and a perfectly stable political situation are the three main factors of attraction to official and private foreign financing and investment, which have registered high levels during these more recent years.

Gross capital inflows totalled US$771 million in 1968, and rose to US$1,291 million in 1969. Both figures have been largely surpassed by that of 1970, US$1,748 million.

The net effect of capital movements on total Brazilian external debt was a US$892 million increase according to Central Bank figures for the registration of debt.
It is important to note that external debt is now under strict control and that eventual pressures affecting the balance of payments are minimized owing to the redistribution of loan maturities over a longer period ahead. This fact, together with a possible rotation of debts and the country's foreign credit standing, ensure that Brazil will be able to meet its obligations without strain.

As mentioned above, capital inflows were the major factor responsible for balance-of-payments surpluses in the last three years.

D. Exchange situation

A perfect interaction between exchange, foreign trade and external debt policies, harmonized with domestic measures to keep inflation under control and to promote economic development, has made possible the adjustment of foreign trade to values more in line with a growing economy, as well as the restoration of foreign credit standing and the improvement of the country's exchange position.
