The International Trade Centre, established in 1964 to support the trade promotion efforts of developing countries, is jointly operated by GATT and UNCTAD.

The Centre helps developing countries to formulate and implement viable trade promotion programmes and activities, and to build up the necessary institutional infrastructure in order to become progressively self-reliant in developing foreign trade. The Centre assists these countries in the creation of specialized services for trade promotion and international marketing, and to identify export market opportunities and adopt the appropriate market development actions. The Centre also trains developing country officials and export executives in trade promotion and export marketing to carry out these tasks.
