On 1 January 1961 the French authorities announced further lists of goods which are no longer subject to import restrictions when imported from the Member Countries of the OEEC and from the United States and Canada.

Among the products whose importation was liberalized are all remaining mineral chemicals, remaining textiles, diesel motors for trucks, insecticides, chinaware, caterpillar cranes, mechanical shovels on caterpillars, tractors on caterpillars, and electronic computers.

The "negative" list of products which still remained non-liberalized after 1 January 1961 was published in the French Journal Officiel of 31 December 1960. It consists very largely of agricultural and food products.
