In line 13 of Mr. Bystricky's remarks delete the words "increased imports" and insert the following:

"the asserted difficulties of the United States producers.

He quoted the American view contained in an article by Clair Wilcox in the Charter for World Trade according to which "the real danger that faces the United States is not that it will import too much but that it will import too little. The United States must permit foreign goods to displace domestic goods in the United States market and less efficient producers must shift to other products and other industries." No proof...
