"Mr. LECKIE (United Kingdom) wished to explain the form of the United Kingdom Torquay Schedule. As the Delegations with whom the United Kingdom had been in negotiation were already aware, the concessions made by the United Kingdom at Torquay would be expressed in two alternative versions, namely, in the language of the present United Kingdom tariff and in the language that would be used if the United Kingdom Government were to adopt the Brussels Nomenclature as the basis for a revised tariff classification. The United Kingdom consolidated Schedule would, therefore, be circulated in two alternative versions. A headnote would explain that the first version, i.e. the one in the language of the present United Kingdom tariff, would be valid unless and until the United Kingdom Government adopted, during the currency of the Torquay Protocol, the Brussels Convention for the Classification of Goods in Customs Tariffs as the basis in United Kingdom domestic law for a revised form of tariff. On the date on which this happened, the United Kingdom Schedule in the first version would cease to be valid and the second version in the terms of the Brussels Nomenclature would become valid."
