I am sending you under separate cover two brochures in which are set out the Reports of Committees II and III of the GATT Trade Expansion Programme. These Reports, which formed part of the material considered by the meeting of Trade Ministers at Geneva last November, are concerned with (a) the problems of international trade in agricultural products and (b) the difficulties faced by the less-developed countries in expanding the markets for their exports. In view of the topicality of the subjects discussed in these brochures - they are pertinent to discussions currently under way in various international forums - I thought you might like to consider the possibility of comment or a short review.

If you have already received these brochures and have looked into them, please accept my apologies.
