I should simply like to add one or two details to what has been said by the representative of the European Communities (SR.42/ST/36). With respect to technical assistance programmes and trade advice given by the GATT secretariat to developing countries participating in the multilateral trade negotiations, the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has always supported such programmes which today are even more important in the light of the complex and comprehensive approach which characterizes the Uruguay Round. The Technical Co-operation Division of the secretariat is going to organize in the course of 1987 three regional seminars for participants from developing countries. The first will be held in Montevideo and will be organized with the help of the Latin American Integration Association (ALADI). The second will be held in Guatemala City, and will be organized together with the Secretariat for Economic Integration of Central America (SIECA). The third seminar will be held in Dakar, and participants from African countries will be invited. My government, which has already co-operated in a similar seminar held in Thailand, will give the requisite financial support, amounting to US$100,000, to these three seminars. We hope that with this contribution it will be seen that we are making continuous efforts in line with the European Communities and with respect to making progress towards active, broad and fruitful participation by developing countries in the new round. Economic development and the liberalization of world trade go hand-in-hand; in other words, they move forward together, or fail together. The success of a GATT round to liberalize world trade depends on the political determination. But from the point of view of the developing countries, the technical expertise allowing full participation is equally important. Therefore, the usefulness of these seminars offered by the GATT secretariat needs no further explanation.
