I. GENERAL POLICY STATEMENT

(Made in the Joint Working Group on Import Restrictions April 1970)

Austria

The main aims of the Austrian agriculture policy are, according to the Austrian law on agriculture:

(1) to maintain an economically sound agrarian population;
(2) to assure the participation of agriculture in the country's overall economic development;
(3) to increase the productivity and competitiveness of agriculture, especially through structural measures;
(4) to promote agriculture, taking into consideration the national economy and interests of consumers, in order to overcome difficulties caused by different factors such as the climatic conditions and geographical situation of Austria; and
(5) to improve the economic situation of population employed in agriculture.

Austrian agriculture is faced with considerable difficulties, caused on the one hand by the well-known general problems of agriculture and, on the other hand, by certain specific factors prevailing in Austria. Nearly 42 per cent of the agricultural area is mountainous, 40 per cent of all farms are smaller than five hectares. Additionally, climate causes serious difficulties in a number of regions. The portion of population employed in agriculture and forestry is steadily declining. From 1958 to 1968 there was a decrease by 25 per cent; and in 1961 the share of agricultural population was less than 19.8 per cent as compared with total population.

Austrian agriculture is undergoing a process of adjustment. The production level in recent years and the increasing problems in finding outlets in the international markets have led to an increasing imbalance between production and demand, especially with respect to wheat and dairy products. In order to reduce wheat and milk production certain measures have been adopted to shift production from these critical sectors to others.
Restrictions are maintained by Austria on some groups of products for more or less the same reasons.

These groups are:

1. Products falling under the Austrian Marketing Law, i.e. cereals, milling products, milk and dairy products and meat;
2. Vegetables and fruits of the temperate zone; and
3. Wine and similar products.

The first group of products is covered by the Provisions of the Protocol of Accession of Austria to GATT. Details on these products and the functioning of the Marketing Law have been explained several times in different bodies in GATT.

As far as the second group is concerned, vegetables and fruits, restrictions on most of the items are applied on a seasonable basis. Moreover, even in the restricted period licences are granted liberally, taking into account the Austrian crop and demand. Some products of this group are to be regarded as hard-core cases, where imports are restricted during the entire year. These products are mainly cultivated by small and medium-sized farms, to which protection must be afforded in order to secure a minimum income for the population involved.

As regards wine and similar products, Austria has been faced with a structural surplus production for several years. To a large extent Austrian wine growers represent very small production units. The Government has endeavoured to meet these economic difficulties by special legal measures and regional limitation of wine production areas. Despite existing difficulties Austria applies a global quota on wine.

In the agricultural sector Austria is a net importer. Nevertheless, for certain reasons Austria as a neutral country has to maintain some degree of self-sufficiency, which has traditionally amounted to about 80 per cent.

Most of the items subject to restrictions are not only restricted as to imports but also with respect to exports, both measures aiming at stabilizing market conditions.

Austria has a positive attitude towards achieving progress in the agricultural field. At the last session of CONTRACTING PARTIES the Austrian delegation underlined that actions on agricultural restrictions should not take place without paying due attention to other agricultural trade obstacles applied by contracting parties.

Austrian Marketing Law provides that cereals and milling products must be offered to the "Fund" at the import price. The "Fund" is not obliged to buy. This is to stabilize prices. Presently this mechanism is not used, however. Currently the "Fund" buys at public tender, taking the best offer. This is in conjunction with an import plan which is drawn up to take account of domestic demand and local production.

(Appplies also to other entries in Chapters 10 and 11, as well as to Item 23.02.)

Austrian Marketing Law provides that cereals and milling products must be offered to the "Fund" at the import price. The "Fund" is not obliged to buy. This is to stabilize prices. Presently this mechanism is not used, however. Currently the "Fund" buys at public tender, taking the best offer. This is in conjunction with an import plan which is drawn up to take account of domestic demand and local production.

Countries indicating an interest: Philippines, United States, Uruguay

(a) Description:

Global quotas except: beet sugar and cane sugar, crude, and sugar candy (ex 17.01)

(b) Comments by other countries:

(c) Comments by country maintaining the measures:

See general policy statement.

Production of sugar is of great importance for the Austrian economy. The income of more than 30,000 farmers derives mainly from the sugar beet production. By-products and chips of sugar beet are also of great significance for animal husbandry and the dairy industry. Beet cultivation is important for crop rotation.

Austrian production of sugar averaged approximately 280,000 tons in the last few years. This figure corresponds approximately to the total annual Austrian demand. Imports and exports of sugar are negligible. The cultivation of sugar beets is subject to quotas as regards both the cultivated area and the quantities in order to avoid a surplus of production. This regulation is based on private agreements between the sugar beet producers and sugar factories.

The Austrian home market price for sugar is fixed under the price regulation law at a maximum level taking into account both the interests of producers and consumers. This price as well as that for sugar beet is lower than the European average price level.
