On page 2, line 2, delete rest of paragraph beginning, "If however..."

Substitute:

"If, however, it was a question of impediment it was true that Article 31 did place some responsibility on Members. For example, if the prices charged on an export product were substantially higher than the prices charged domestically, and this could happen if the selling country held a world monopoly in that product, then Article 31 would require negotiations, upon request, with respect to the amount of that price differential. These negotiations would be subject to the provisions regarding negotiation of import and export duties."

At middle of same page, Mr. EVANS (United States) remarks should read:

"Mr. EVANS (United States) agreed with the representative of Uruguay that his remarks and those of the representative of the United Kingdom could not be taken as accomplishing the same thing as the Argentine amendment. The first paragraph of the Argentine amendment, interpreted literally, would provide a complete exemption to the rule of non-discrimination for most state trading enterprises. On the other hand, the problems raised by the representatives of Argentina in his remarks appeared to be already covered in the Charter."
