In accordance with the views expressed at the plenary session by the Head of the Chilean delegation and by several other delegations, urging that the International Trade Organization should give full consideration to problems arising from economic development, industrialization and employment, and not underrate their importance, the Chilean delegation proposes that in addition to the three commissions provided for by Article 61 of the Suggested Charter now under consideration, a fourth commission be established to deal with these matters. The establishment of a "Commission on the Expansion of Production, Industrialization and Employment" would make the Organization complete and would meet one of the principal wishes of countries still at an early stage of economic development.

The new commission could have the following general functions:

To investigate the problems of non-industrialized countries or countries in an early stage of industrial development, regarding the sale in adequate quantities and at satisfactory prices of commodities, manufactured or non-manufactured, essential to the maintenance of economic stability and to the raising of working and living standards in those countries.

To investigate the problems which arise from the industrialization of such countries.

To recommend to the Executive Board appropriate courses of action relating to such problems and to recommend such economic, financial and technical cooperation as may assist in the industrialization of such countries.
The Chilean delegation has already submitted to the Joint Committee some proposals relating to the problems of industrialization, of expansion of production and of employment, which problems fall within the scope of the proposed commission. More detailed definition of the actual functions of the commission may therefore be left until a later date.
